

Abstract

Researcher: Azizah Yousef Al-Awwad

Degree: Master

Title of the study: Islamic education methods in the development of the values of friendliness between parents and children and its contemporary applications.

The objective of the study was to clarify the concept of friendliness and to identify faithful, social and moral methods and its contemporary applications.

Study methodology: the deductive approach and the inductive approach were used, and the chapters of the study were as follows:

The chapters of the study: The nature of the study required to be in four chapters and a conclusion, as follows:

- The first chapter: the general framework of the study, and it included: the introduction, the subject of the study, its questions, objectives, importance, methodology, terms and a view of the previous studies.
- The second chapter: The meaning of friendliness between parents and children, and faithful education methods in developing the values of friendliness between parents and children and its contemporary applications.
- The third chapter: the social education methods in developing the values of friendliness between parents and children and its contemporary applications.
- The fourth chapter: Moral Education Methods in developing the values of friendliness between Parents and Children and its contemporary applications.
- The Conclusion of the study: It includes some findings and recommendations.

The main results of the study:

- 1- There are many reasons that lead to establish the links of friendliness in the human soul, and friendliness is important in society so that we can use all educational methods.
- 2- Parents have an active role in the use of various methods with children to achieve friendliness and love between them.

Educational methods are renewed and developed, and parents may use them in the faithful, social and moral field, as methods are not limited to a particular field, as they may be more certain in some and